Reasons for Designation

The Camelot Island Picnic Shelter is a “Recognized” Federal Heritage Building because of its historical associations, and its architectural and environmental values:

Historical value:
The Camelot Island Picnic Shelter is associated with the establishment of national parks through the subtheme of growth of the parks in the 1950s. At St. Lawrence Islands National Park (SLINP), this necessitated the construction of additional recreational facilities, including picnic shelters.

Architectural value:
The Camelot Island Picnic Shelter is a good example typical of postwar national park picnic shelters, the design of which had changed little since the 1930s. The simple, open plan of the picnic shelter is appropriate to its intended use, permitting a view of the surrounding scenery while providing protection from sun and inclement weather. The unpartitioned interior space allows for flexible use. Standard components found in the Camelot Island Picnic Shelter include a hipped roof with exposed rafter ends, wood support posts with diagonal brackets, and a concrete slab foundation. The surrounding half-wall is composed of a section clad in horizontal overlapping boards and a section of vertical posts and rails.

Environmental value:
Together with a small privy, the Camelot Island Picnic Shelter stands alone on a heavily treed island site in the St. Lawrence River. The shelter is close to, but not visible from, the water. The rustic character of the shelter is appropriate to this setting. It is conveniently located near a dock and is well-known and well-used.

Character-Defining Elements

The following character-defining elements of the Camelot Island Picnic Shelter should be respected:

Its role as an illustration of the increased visitorship to national parks during the postwar period is reflected in:

- its simple, open design, in keeping with its role as a public picnic shelter;

Its rustic aesthetic and conformity to a standard design for national park picnic shelters as manifested in:

- the open design and unpartitioned interior space;
- the hipped roof, exposed rafters, wood support posts and diagonal brackets, surrounding half-wall and concrete slab floor.

The manner in which it reinforces the rustic, yet accessible character of the setting as evidenced in:

- its picturesque siting on a heavily treed island site, with a privy and dock nearby.
